

STATINTL
[REDACTED]

Daily Log - 21 November 1951

I asked General Brannon, Army Judge Advocate General, if it would suit their requirements to ask that a man who had worked with CIA and who is now commissioned in the JAG could be assigned so that his experience would add to his usefulness to us when his JAG duty would be over. General Brannon said this was quite agreeable and called in Colonel Miller, JAG Personnel Chief, who took the name of [REDACTED] STATINTL [REDACTED] to investigate the possibilities of having him assigned to the Far East when his training was finished, which he estimated would be next spring. Inquired whether we could ask for JAG assistance on certain questions such as interrogation of PW's under the Geneva conventions and General Brannon called in Colonel Barratt, Chief of his Military Affairs Division. Colonel Barratt said there was no basic problem under the conventions and no notice need be given to the International Red Cross but that his section had been advising psychological warfare agencies and intelligence agencies of defense on specific problems. He said he would be glad to give us benefit of their experience if any such problems arise in CIA.
